SPORTALOOSA

Quarterly

Foal futurity, video trip & auction

As we head towards our 4th birthday, we're delighted to have had 14 entries in the annual foal futurity, judged by Ian Francis, and to have divvied up a prize pool of $1,000 between the first four placegetters. Thanks again to all entrants on a great competition.

Preparation for Equitana and Equidays is well underway and we've seen and approved Horse Talk TV's segment on Sportaloosas, to be screened later this year.

Kiwi Sportaloosa will have video camera in hand ready to tackle another Sportaloosa video trip immediately after Equitana. It's currently a 3-state visit: Victoria, South Australia and NSW and she'll try hard to get to as many stallions as possible.

The cost for Sportaloosa stallion owners is $150 (NZD) plus share of travel, which includes individual video, photos, inclusion in the 2013 Sportaloosa stallion DVD, promotion of videos on our web site and plenty more.

We've managed so much promotion for the stallions filmed during the last trip, simply because we had good quality video footage available, that we really recommend taking part!

Late this year, we'll also be running another exciting Sportaloosa auction. This is a stunning opportunity to draw a heap of attention to quality spotted horses for sale, so stand by for more details.

Until next time

The second great Sportaloosa video trip - November 2012

Our star videographer will be in Australia in late-November 2012 to attend Equitana in Melbourne. She'll have her high definition video camera in hand and is available to film as many stallions as she can squeeze into her schedule.

She'll be available to film other breeds as well (but as you'd expect, there's a really special deal for Sportaloosa members). She's currently down to travel through Victoria, South Australia and NSW and she's not daunted by distance so please don't hesitate to register your interest.

What you get

- a top quality video representation of your stallion as he really is, illustrating his best qualities as seen at the time he's filmed
- skilled equine videographer at your farm (or selected location)
- top quality video camera
- a very steady hand
- a keen eye for the right setting
- a critical approach to editing, ensuring only the most complimentary footage makes it to the final cut
- accompanying royalty-free music
- final video supplied on DVD (3 copies - more available on request) and loaded to YouTube and
- available for you to display on your web site (how to instructions provided or we can do this for you) and
- promoted on YouTube, so people searching for your type of stallion can find him and
- any still photos taken during filming and
- most importantly, an immense amount of care taken to produce the best possible finished product
- if it's not right, we'll edit again

Super special for Sportaloosa stallions promoted on the Sportaloosa stallion showcase

- all this plus promotion on Sportaloosa TV and on your Sportaloosa stallion showcase listing
- $150 NZD (that's worth a little less than the Australian dollar) plus share of travel

All other stallions

$300 NZD (that's worth a little less than the Australian dollar) plus share of travel

Other options

if you'd like more stallions, foals or mares filmed, or are keen for a stud promotion video, just ask.

Register your interest (no obligation)

Email petra@sportaloosa.com with your location and let her know you're keen to have your stallion (or stallions/studs/foals or more) filmed and she'll be back to you promptly. No question too small or silly!

Some Do's and Don't For Starting Your Young Jumping Horse

- Don't consider any obstacle under 60cm as a jump, it is a test of obedience for your horse to go where you send it
- For a horse to jump with rhythm and balance it must have it in the canter before you ever go near a jump.
- Do teach your horse to jump on a loose rein, he can then develop the rhythm and freedom of head and neck, it is the horse's job to take off, watch what he's doing and look after his own legs.
- If you have to "create a canter" and manufacture balance then unfortunately your horse has no talent, these must be natural for a good horse.
- For riders it is good to learn to stand up in your stirrups and balance there at the walk, trot and canter. When you stand in your stirrups your pelvis is in balance over the horse's wither which is perfect, same as jockeys on racehorses with their short stirrups!
- It is a fallacy that 'you lean forward over a jump'! When you lean the top of your body forward your backside goes out the back which equals no shift in balance.
- If you concentrate on being balanced and giving clear messages to your horse he can perform.

Ace High Appaloosa Stud presents

Mighty Windsong

Mighty Windsong is a black roan, snowcap blanketed Appaloosa stallion. Athletic and active with very quick responses, he is the ideal sire of performance Appaloosas.

At 14.3hh he is a superb cross with Thoroughbred mares for added height, while retaining the athletic ability and fabulous temperament he shows in abundance.

A multi-champion at halter, Mighty Windsong's conformation, presence, versatility and teachable temperament are just what you're looking for in a stallion.

His colour producing ability is an added bonus.

Ten habits of competent riders

posted on the internet
by Horse Listening

We can all think of a rider we know who seems to always do well, has calm, happy horses and steadily improves their horse's physical and mental state in an almost effortless manner. We watch and admire from afar but in fact, we can all stand to learn from their regular habits and "way of being" in order to develop our own horse riding mantra.

1. Persistence: good riders are willing to try, try again. They know that there will be more rides, more days and the slow and steady approach always wins the "race".
2. Open-mindedness: good riders know there is something to be learned from everyone, even if to see proof of why NoT to do something. These riders are not discipline racist and are always aware that good riding is good riding, regardless of the saddle or style.
3. Patience: good riders are willing to wait to reap the rewards. They know that even if something falls apart today, there will be more days to come and small steps, even backward, are more beneficial than quick fixes or shortcuts.
4. Quitting: this may seem counter-intuitive but good riders quit while they're ahead. They ride for short periods of time to their highest ability then call it a day. They seem to intuitively know when enough is enough.
5. Effectiveness: good riders seek maximum effectiveness with minimum harm. They make every step count and they resist overriding the horse for the sake of performance.
6. Self-improvement: good riders regularly seek to upgrade their riding skills and general horse education. They are willing to spend time, money and humility in the quest for constant self-improvement.
7. Seeing the big picture: good riders enjoy the "work" and the path as much as they do the goal achievement. They know that each day and each step is as important as the other and is a nature progression in development.
8. Role models: good riders know good riding when they see it and seek to surround themselves with those who will not only help them improve on a riding level but also on a more personal and inspirational level as well.
9. Problem solving: good riders can trouble shoot through problems to come to gratifying solutions. They have many tools and know there is more than one way to approach a situation. They are always willing to try new things.
10. Horse listeners: good riders are expert horse listeners! They are sensitive to the feedback from their horses and adjust their responses accordingly.

What kind of a spot?

Q How do you describe this patch, which appears on a horse with an Appaloosa sire and dam.

A These spots are a coat pattern variant that occurs on some Appaloosas. Since they only happen infrequently, they are a bit of a surprise when they show up.

I call them "snowball spots", since they look like big clumps of the more familiar snowflakes that some Appaloosas get as they roan.

However, snowball spots differ from snowflake roaning, in that they are present from birth. Sometimes, they are mistaken for "paint" markings, but this they are not. They are simply patches on the body where LP's action is expressed very strongly.

One way to confirm this is to DNA test the horse for all the known "paint" pattern mutations - but truly, there is no need if the spot(s) are typical snowball spots. One can tell by visual comparison what is probably occurring, and save a pile of $$!

Here are some phenotype-based observations that support the classification of snowball spots as "appaloosa specific" patterns, and not "paint" markings. White spots caused by frame overo, splashed white or tobiano all tend to have crisp, clearly defined edges - here are examples of each, so you can see what I mean:

Frame overo minimalists do have a spot or two on the side of the body, but it's not round, and it's sharply defined...

Splashed white "comes up from below" and involves a lot of face white when levels of expression are high enough to produce a body spot...

Tobiano white spotting always crosses the spine, and involves the legs, usually all four...

Snowball spots don't look like this - they have roany, soft edges.

While it is true that some sabino-type spotting patterns have softer, roany edges, the spots are not round, as they are in the case of snowball spots. This is an important difference, as is the location of these spots. Also - the horse you posted a picture of doesn't show any white leg markings at all - one could not possibly categorize it as having extensive sabino patterning!

To illustrate, here's a picture of a Tennessee Walking Horse with sabino spotting (probably sabino-1):

As you can see, this TWH has a lot of leg and face white, and its side spots are NOT round!

Finally, the location of snowball spots is not typical of any known "paint" spotting patterns. Snowballs are usually on the side of the body, and while frame overo spots are expressed on the side, they are neither round nor fuzzy edged...

Though we do not know the specific conditions that cause them, snowball spots are likely produced by some sort of modifier - either genetic or environmental.

Cayuse

Blizzard-O-Lena

Ric O'Lena x Cayuse Skip N On Ice by Skip's Supreme

N/N for HYPP, Herda & PSSM1

Ice's pedigree is full of names to brag about and he is a looker to boot. Being a Palomino fewspot, we expect Ice will produce loads of colour including dilutes in a full range of coat patterns. Blessed with a stunningly thick, wavy mane & tail, Ice really looks like a fairytale horse when all scrubbed up.

He's quick on his feet and can turn on a dime. Ice is now freshly broken and is showing promise for numerous sports including reining, cutting and campdrafting. Ice has a kind, gentle nature and a relaxed, sensible disposition. He is handled by the whole family and is an absolute pleasure to own.
